

The link between security and development has been rediscovered since 9/11 by a broad range of scholars. Focusing on Southern Africa, The Security-Development Nexus shows that the much debated linkage is by no means a recent invention. Rather, the security/development link has been an important element of the state policies of colonial as well as post-colonial regimes during the Cold War, and it seems to be prospering in new configurations under the present wave of democratic transitions.

Contributors focus on a variety of contexts from South Africa, Mozambique, and Namibia, to Zimbabwe and Democratic Congo; they explore the nexus and our understanding of security and development through the prism of peace-keeping interventions, community policing, human rights, gender, land contests, squatters, nation and state-building, social movements, disarmament, demobilisation and reintegration programmes and the different trajectories democratization has taken in different parts of the region.

Lars Buur and Finn Stepputat are Senior Researchers at the Danish Institute for International Studies. Steffen Jensen is Senior Researcher at the Rehabilitation and Research Centre for Torture Survivors.
